The font is available in a number of different formats includingThe hospital focus, by Chris Patton on WSJ.com Philly Hospital, State Reach Agreement on Closure Plan PHILADELPHIA -- A row over the fate of a Philadelphia hospital has been settled -- at least for now. The Pennsylvania Department of Health and the nonprofit Delaware Valley Health System reached a provisional agreement on plans to close Philadelphia's Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania, the Philadelphia Business Journal reported. The deal "calls for a reorganization and financial arrangement" of the hospital, the Department of Health said in a statement on its Web site. If the agreement is approved by the Department of Health, as expected, the hospital would close, according to the Journal. The Board of Trustees of the University of Pennsylvania and the Delaware Valley Health System have reached a "provisional agreement on the future of the hospital," the university said in a statement. The board will meet Monday afternoon to "vote to approve the final terms of this arrangement," the statement said. The hospital's closure would mark a second blow to the region's health care industry. Earlier this month, the regional authority that runs the region's hospitals proposed to close Holy Redeemer Hospital in West Philadelphia in favor of a new facility in Willow Grove. Fahim Siddiqi, 19, had written online that he was suicidal and was "on the verge of the abyss". His parents said he had been contacted by Chinese police and had told them that he had been threatened online. A Chinese police report said he had gone missing after saying he was "going to eat something then jump off the bridge", but that officers did not find any body when they searched for him. Pakistna news agency cited his uncle as saying he had been drinking with friends on the evening of 24 October. The agency said that he had arrived in China on 15 October after crossing the border at Torkham in Pakistan. While in China, he wrote that he had been threatened by a woman who had posted a message online. "I am a Pakistani student in China and I have received threats from a woman on social media and now I am planning to end my life," he said in a message on 26 October. On the same day, he told the same woman that he was going to eat something and jump off the bridge. He said that he had had enough of life, but
