What's New In?

(IPI.HELPDESK) is an interactive tool for customer communication via web site. It does not depend on any particular software (Ex. a web server), so your business could be run using a simple PHP script and you could use any host service provider's server in the world. For customer/client to communicate with IPI.HELPDESK, you can use a personal account or the accounts created in advance on your web site. When the customer logs into your web site, the account used to access the web site appears with a personal inbox on the web site. We call it "your private office". Each account manages its own web site and is separated from the accounts of other customers. Customers may access "your private office" freely without additional software on the home pages of your web site and will be notified of incoming e-mails via e-mail on these pages. The notification will prompt customers to access the

IPI.HELPDESK account. When customers of all language versions log into your web site, the IPI.HELPDESK interface is displayed in the language of your choice. The interface is also used for web site-wide communication with customers. When an e-mail arrives at your account via a customer service mailbox, the customer name and name of the e-mail's author will be displayed, and the e-mail is classified automatically by the system. As your customers become more familiar with IPI.HELPDESK, they will have an easier time working with the system. In this case, the progress of their job as much as the number of pending tasks will be displayed in the mailbox of "your private office". When a customer reaches the limit of the number of pending tasks, the system will send him an e-mail about the status of his pending tasks. You can review customer requests via the IPI.HELPDESK account. And you can cancel, change, or postpone pending tasks without burdening the customer. When a customer requests, a deadline is automatically set in the task management area of the

IPI.HELPDESK account. Since the communication with customers is the core of the business, IPI.HELPDESK also provides other features. You can create new contacts or modify existing contacts. You can also establish relationship with a contact, depending on the kind of relationship you want with them. In addition, users can create and use
