not remain the same and therefore I was unable to get the most out of the user license. Thirdly, for the work/play balance, what do you think the balance should be between the two? Is there a solution? In the past I have found that being someone who is really driven by work, in my case, then achieving an idea and using all of the available tools to fulfil it, works well for me. It's unfortunate that this isn't a more common approach, therefore, the balance will never be perfect, but nevertheless, there's enough tension for the health of the users. So perhaps if I had to choose and I thought I could only have one or the other, I would go for play. Why? Because I am lazy and always want to play. It's my preferred way of escaping reality and doing something that feels good, that makes me smile. I know it's not practical and many people would love to put down the idea of playing, but if I had to choose, for me, it would be play and a balance is the price I pay. Like this: Like Loading...The reported new HIV/AIDS cases in the United States increased from an estimated 42,602 (4.3%) new diagnoses in 2000 to an estimated 45,153 (4.5%) in 2009 [@pone.0052890-Centers1]. Primary care physicians are likely to play a pivotal role in linking newly diagnosed patients to the appropriate HIV/AIDS-related services. A study conducted in Wisconsin found that primary care physicians were often the first to recognize signs and symptoms of HIV/AIDS in their patients, and thus were in a key position to provide early identification of HIV-positive patients [@pone.0052890-Younge1]. This study used a unique resource in China, the NHIF database, which contains data on all health care services in China. Therefore, it is possible to assess the utilization of HIV/AIDS-related primary care services. The results showed that from 2004 to 2008, there was an increase in both the annual number and the percentage of HIV/AIDS patients receiving primary care among all persons in China. The estimated annual number of people visiting HIV/AIDS-related primary care physicians in 2007 was 2.1 million, of whom 27% were women. About 20% of these visits were with an opportunistic infection. It is noteworthy that more than half of HIV/AIDS

Q: How to modify the filter defined by mysql and have it be efficient? I have a database with a table with 'houses' and I want to modify the output of the data in the form: mysql> select * from houses; +--------+-------+-------+ | House_1 | House_2 | House_3 | +--------+-------+-------+ | 1 | 2 | 3 | +--------+-------+-------+ I want the filter query to look like this: +--------+-------+-------+ | House_1 | House_2 | House_3 | +--------+-------+-------+ | 3 | 2 | 1 | +--------+-------+-------+ I would like to have a good filter query that involves minimal work in a server. I would really like an efficient query with the least amount of server work as possible. A: With MySQL 5.7.9+, you can use the FILTER clause for this (see here). It uses an efficient algorithm to build a table based on the condition that is passed to it. So, in your case, something like this could be used: select * from houses where house_id in (1,3,2); Using FILTER, this would be much better: select * from houses where house_id in (1,3,2) group by house_id order by (min(house_id) - max(house_id)) desc; An SQLFiddle with both is here. Here's the important part: In addition, MySQL can use an index with GROUP BY to replace a subquery: mysql> SELECT COUNT(*) FROM t1 WHERE field IN (SELECT field FROM t2); This works even when the subquery is a correlated subquery. When an index on t2 can be used, the optimizer usually finds and uses it, unless there is no usable index and the optimizer chooses to build a temporary table. Reference:
