The Fourth Amendment is violated "only when the government obtains evidence in a manner that would violate the Fourth Amendment if it had been conducted in a private party's home." United States v. Jones, 356 F.3d 529, 537 (4th Cir. 2004). If a criminal defendant demonstrates that a warrantless search occurred in the course of a private party's involvement in law enforcement, the court must evaluate (1) the validity of the underlying search warrant; (2) whether the search was conducted in a private party's home; (3) whether the defendant and the private party had prior (or established) intimate association; (4) the substantiality of the private party's interest in the premises searched; and (5) the degree of police participation in the search. Id. at 536. There are two categories of private searches: (1) what the Supreme Court has termed "private searches" and (2) what the Supreme Court has termed "vicarious searches." Id. at 540.
